Heavy rains fueled by the meeting of two storm systems, one the remnants of Hurricane Patricia, pounded southeastern Texas, triggering flash floods and derailing a freight train as the heavy weather descended upon Houston early on Sunday. REUTERS

2 FLORIDA BEAR HUNT

Florida's first bear hunt in two decades opens on Saturday, joining other states that have loosened restrictions on hunting large predators, to the dismay of animal rights activists who see them as "trophy hunts." The hunt, which will span up to one week and allow up to 320 black bears to be killed, aims to stabilize a population that has rebounded to more than 3,000 from several hundred in the 1970s, according to the Florida Fish and Wildlife Conservation Commission. 3 ISLAMIC STATE RISE

Former British Prime Minister Tony Blair acknowledged the 2003 invasion of Iraq played a part in the rise of the Islamic State militant group, and apologized for some mistakes in planning the war, in an interview broadcast. Blair's decision to send troops to back the U.S.-led invasion is still a live political issue in Britain. REUTERS

A big flock of sheep is led by the center of Madrid, Spain on Sunday. Shepherds leading about 2000 sheep arrived to the capital, called by Transhumance and Nature association, to promote the conservation of the ancient paths of transhumance (moving flocks from winter to summer pastures) dating back some 8,000 years.

4 NASDAQ MAY SET RECORD

The Nasdaq 100 index may set a record high next week, helped by good earnings from Apple Inc expected on Tuesday. Technology shares led the U.S. stock market's recovery this week from its worst correction in four years in August, thanks to gains in Alphabet, Amazon and Microsoft, after the three companies reported better-than-expected earnings results. 5 EDWARDS FACES RUNOFF

Louisiana voters on Saturday threw support behind Democrat John Bel Edwards in his bid to succeed Gov. Bobby Jindal, but Edwards will have to face off with Republican U.S. Sen. David Vitter in a Nov. 21 runoff when no candidate polled more than 50 percent. Edwards, the minority leader in the state House, carried 40 percent to Vitter's 23 percent, after a campaign in which Vitter's opponents hammered on a prostitution scandal that has haunted him for several years. Cable fire causes T delays

It took just 15 minutes to quell the blaze that affected the Red Line and commuter rail.

An electrical cable on the fritz was to blame for a fire that caused delays on the Red Line and commuter rail Sunday morning, officials said.

Flames erupted on the inbound track leading to a maintenance facility near Andrew station and Dorchester Avenue just before 9 a.m. Sunday, Lt. Mike Walsh of the Boston Fire Department told Metro.

"The cables are coated in plastic and insulation, and the electricity gives off heat," Walsh said. "There was probably a service issue there, and as a result, the insulation from the coating of the wire caught fire."

"The insulation from the coating of the wire caught fire." Walsh

It took fire crews 15 minutes to extinguish the flames, Walsh said. He said he did not believe there was permanent damage to the track.

But the incident caused headaches for commuters on the Red Line and commuter rail as crews responded to the scene of the fire.

The T tweeted reports of moderate delays on the Red line at 9:34 a.m., upgraded to "severe" at 9:44. Regular service resumed at 10:45 a.m.

Greenbush trains on the commuter rail saw delays of 90 and 30 minutes, a Kinsgston-Plymouth train was delayed 15-25 minutes and one train from Middleborough-Lakeville was terminated altogether, the service tweeted.

Woman fights off knife-wielding robber

A woman who was attacked at knifepoint in Fenway early Sunday morning told police she fought back against her attacker.

Police arrested suspect Wayne Barber, 53, of Dorchester shortly after the attack. He was scheduled to be arraigned Monday in Roxbury District Court.

Officers responded to the area of 137 Park Drive near the Back Bay Fens around 2:21 a.m. after reports of a woman screaming, according to a police report.

The victim told police she had been walking in a rear alley when the suspect pushed her to the ground, pulled out a knife and tried to steal her purse, the report said. The woman fought back by kicking and hitting the suspect, who then ran away, police said.

The woman sustained a knife wound that wasn't considered life threatening, police said.

Acting on a description the victim provided to police, officers from the Boston and Northeastern University police departments later chased Barber and "wrestled him to the ground," according to the report.

Officers found personal items that belonged to the victim and recovered a knife that had been discarded during the chase, police said.

Barber was scheduled to be arraigned in Roxbury District Court on charges of armed robbery, attempted murder and assault and battery with a dangerous weapon, the report said.

Boston's official pumpkin dubbed "Gourdo"

Boston's official pumpkin and its three compatriots now have names.

The Boston Public Market told Metro the much-celebrated 1,020 pound pumpkin would henceforth be known as "Gourdo."

The market last week asked visitors to contribute name ideas via ballots for the impossibly big orb of pulp, which had been tweeting until now as the "BPM Pumpking."

"We were delighted by all the creative responses to our naming competition and thrilled to have so many people visit the market to see 'Gourdo the Pumpking' and the other giant pumpkins," said Tiffani Emig, BPM manager, in an email.

The three other gigantic vegetables on display in the market were dubbed "Squashel Adams," "Linus" and "Gertrude."

Since their arrival on Wednesday, they quickly became a destination for Bostonians looking to pose for pictures and ogle the agricultural marvels.

Gourdo was by far the biggest among them. The others weighed in at 450, 500 and 800 pounds, a market spokesman said.

BPD: Ex-employee murdered uncle

Yvonne Lewis, a former civilian employee at the Boston Police Department, is due in court today on murder charges.

SPENCER BUELL

The woman who police believe killed her uncle and then led officers on a five-hour manhunt is due in court on Monday to face murder charges.

Yvonne Lewis, 36, of Hyde Park, a former civilian employee at the Boston Police Department and apparent aspiring actress, was scheduled to face murder charges at the West Roxbury Division of the Boston Municipal Court.

Police believe Lewis shot her uncle, 49-year-old Clive Francis of Mattapan, on Saturday.

Francis died of his injuries at Brigham and Women's hospital, police said.

"Thank you to all of our community friends who helped us locate and apprehend Yvonne Lewis without incident." Evans

A motive for the alleged killing was still unknown on Sunday.

Lewis previously worked as a "communications equipment operator" for the Boston Police Department, a spokesman said.

On LinkedIn, a woman named Yvonne Lewis listed the civilian BPD position in her job history, but also wrote that she was currently self-employed and described her job title as "Actress/ Model/ V.O/ Host/ Talent/ Choreographer/ Personalirt (sic) Talent."

The unusual case began at 12:41 p.m. on Saturday, when police received a report of a person shot in a home at 239 Wood Ave. in Hyde Park.

Police first began tweeting about the search for the suspect around 2 p.m., at one point tweeting that the suspect was "considered armed and dangerous."

The call-out asked for people to look for both a red Nissan with a Massachusetts license plate and a white Lexus with a Georgia license plate.

Yvonne Lewis LINKEDIN

About five hours later, police from Boston and Peabody arrested Lewis at a Peabody hotel without incident.

At 5:58 p.m., police tweeted that the suspect was in custody. Boston Police Commissioner William Evans said in a tweet: "Thank you to all of our community friends who helped us locate and apprehend Yvonne Lewis without incident."

More details were expected to emerge at Lewis' arraignment Monday.

Going ape for Halloween

Animals eat and play with pumpkins at Franklin Park Zoo's 'Zoo Howl.'

SPENCER BUELL
@MetroBOS
spencer.buell@metro.us

Gorillas and anteaters noshed on pumpkins and kids dressed up like their favorite zoo-dwellers on Sunday for a spook-tacular day at the Franklin Park Zoo.

The zoo's Halloween celebration, called "Zoo Howl," had all the essentials: trick-or-treating, a haunted maze, "ghoulish games" and costume contests, plus lots of special fall treats for the furry beasts.

The pumpkins were "enrichment" for the zoo's animals, a spokeswoman said — stimulation for the critters in captivity that let them play around and add some variety to their lives in pens and behind glass viewing areas.

"They certainly don't get pumpkins every day at the zoo. It's a novel treat," said Brooke Wardrop, the zoo's marketing director. "Some of the animals eat the pumpkin, some of them roll them around or bat them around. It depends on the species."

Okie the gorilla ate his like an apple. Zookeepers buried some food in the pumpkin given to Jockamo the anteater. Jockamo stuck his snout in a hole at the top to scoop out his grub.

All sorts of animals got their chance to experiment, because why would you want to leave out the tigers, the lions or the condors?

It's a tradition at the zoo to mark the fall season with some Halloween fun, Wardrop said. She said more than 1,700 turned out on Saturday, and 1,400 were there on Sunday for the two-day event

"It's something people really look forward to," Wardrop said. "It's fun for the animals and it's fun for the visitors to see."

The zoo looks for donors to buy enrichment items for their animals, and even has a wish list on Amazon of toys and games for their animals to mess around with, from bouncy balls and children's books to scratch pads and exercise wheels.

Head back to the zoo on Halloween to take part in its Run Wild 5K. Want to see more animals eating funny things? Nov. 7 is the fifth-birthday party for one of the zoo's gorillas, Kambiri, and Wardrop said there may be primate-friendly cake served, plus human-friendly cake for visitors.

Gwen Stefani and Gavin Rossdale divorce all settled

As far as the dissolution of celebrity marriages go, this one seems pretty swift. Gwen Stefani and Gavin Rossdale have already reached a settlement in the divorce proceedings they started in August after announcing their split, according to TMZ, and apparently Rossdale is taking less than half of their common property in an effort to make things go smoothly. How big of him. They apparently didn't have a prenup, by the way. They'll also be going the joint custody route for their three sons, though Rossdale is expected to have them more since his work schedule isn't as hectic as hers. That's the kind of subtle burn I appreciate, TMZ sources.

Of course, this whole "let's be nice about this and keep things moving" is directly at odds with a Radar Online report that claims Rossdale has been a lot more demanding in the negotiations. "Gavin is seeking at least $50 million from Gwen, along with monthly child and spousal support," a source says, though that's not all: "Gwen can't believe that Gavin is asking for their Beverly Hills mansion as part of the settlement." And honestly, neither can TMZ.

Jeremy Renner angers the equal pay crowd

Renner and Lawrence GETTY IMAGES

After Jennifer Lawrence wrote her blistering essay for Lena Dunham about pay inequality, "Why do I make less than my co-stars," and Bradley Cooper came out strongly in support of the issue, someone obviously thought, "Hey, I wonder what the rest of the 'American Hustle' cast thinks of all this?" Too bad they asked Jeremy Renner next. "That's not my job," Renner said when asked about negotiating alongside female co-stars to ensure fair treatment. "I don't know contracts and money and all that sort of stuff. When it comes to that sort of stuff I let other people deal with that." So it's not so much that Renner is anti-women so much as he's just bad at math stuff — which I can totally relate to. Hopefully Amy Adams or Christian Bale can settle this once and for all.

Franco on Faulkner

James Franco brings William Faulkner's "The Sound and the Fury" to the screen, and not without some struggle.

NED EHRBAR
@Nedrick
ned.ehrbar@metro.us

Franco directed and stars in "The Sound and the Fury," his second Faulkner adaptation. NEW FILMS INTERNATIONAL

James Franco has been striking a balance between commercial success and indulging his more artistically minded interests for some time now, and that negotiation came in handy when directing his latest, "The Sound and the Fury," William Faulkner's dense tale of a Mississippi family falling into ruin.

How long did this take to get off the ground?
Once we decided to do it, it didn't take that long because I was already in touch with the Faulkner estate for "As I Lay Dying." For a minute, it looked like David Milch was going to do a Faulkner-based series on HBO, and he had acquired most of the Faulkner rights, but the two that he didn't have were "As I Lay Dying" and "The Sound and the Fury," which were the two that I definitely wanted to do.

How about financing it?
It's a tough sell, you know? It's not "Avengers." There are no superheroes or anything like that, so I had to do a bit of scrambling to get the money together, but at this point in my career, I just feel like this is one of the main reasons I'm doing it — and one of the things I can use my position in the commercial film world to get done. So we had to scramble a little bit to get the money, but eventually we did.

In an ideal world, this wouldn't be a tough sell, though.
[Laughs] I mean, most people are just not that interested. It's largely a young person's medium, at least for the big bucks. But I've learned how to do these movies that I want to do in such a way that they're not burdened with a huge budget — but enough of a budget that you can make these movies in exactly the way that we want to make them and still not have to make huge, huge numbers when you sell them.

You keep making them, so it must be working.
Yeah, exactly. There is truth in the old adage of "one for me, one for them." I'm in a pretty fortunate position where the one for them is usually one that I love anyway. If I do a movie with Seth Rogen — unless it gets shut out of the theaters by another country — a lot of people usually go see those movies. So I'm fortunate. It's sort of one for me and then another one for me because the one for them is also for me. [Laughs]

What do you think is the best American novel?
Obviously, I think Faulkner is one of the greats. I think Faulkner got a lot of his stuff from Melville, "Moby Dick," the Bible and maybe Cervantes' "Don Quixote." And Proust and Joyce, obviously. As far as American novels go, I think "Moby Dick" is the granddaddy, and then maybe Faulkner is the next generation.

Rites of passage

You recently had a bar mitzvah for charity. How does it feel to finally be a man?
It turned out really well. I had an official bar mitzvah, and then we had the charity celebration for Seth's Hilarity for Charity organization, and they raised a lot of money to help fight Alzheimer's, so it was great. I feel a little different, sure. I have to say, I started teaching recently — actually I've been teaching for six years now — and once I started teaching, that's when I really felt like, "Oh s—, I'm kind of an adult now." I'm teaching people with less experience than I have. That's really when I started feeling like, "Oh, I guess I am a man." [Laughs]

Today, James Franco is a man.

Myth busting, foodie-style

Comic legend Michael McKean gets serious about dispelling some old food ideas.

NED EHRBAR
@Nedrick
ned.ehrbar@metro.us

McKean doesn't know why you'd eat these, but he'll tell you how it started on "Food: Fact or Fiction?" premiering tonight at 10:30 p.m. on the Cooking Channel. GETTY IMAGES

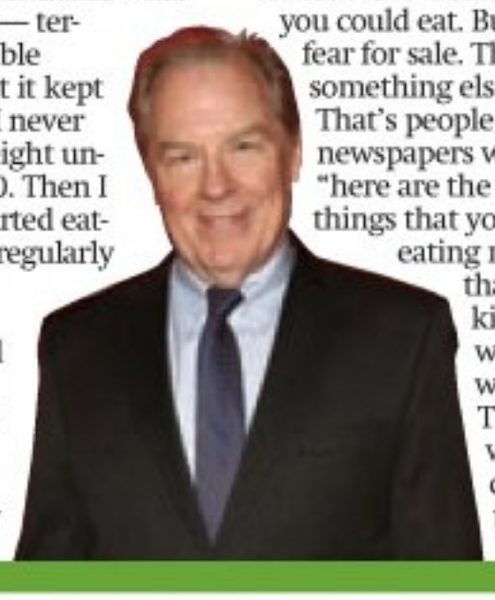
Michael McKean goes from "Spinal Tap," "Best in Show" and "Better Call Saul" to the Cooking Channel for the new "Food: Fact or Fiction?" to channel a passion for food into tackling some famous misconceptions about what we eat. Except he doesn't really so much have a passion for food, it turns out.

What was it about food myths that sparked your interest?
It seemed to me that there were some interesting questions about the things that we know, not even just in the world of food. In the things that everybody knows, there are a lot of things that nobody knows because they're too busy thinking that they do know it. Some things are just axiomatic — "breakfast is the most important meal of the day." Well yeah, unless the other two are more important. The idea of eating a big breakfast is kind of a newish one.

Were there any revelations about food that really surprised you?
Yeah, dozens of them. There are still some mysteries which I will never get a satisfactory explanation of, like why people eat oysters in any form whatsoever. These people are insane. But I guess that's a personal taste.

I've always felt that way about eggs. Like, who had that idea first?
"These things that come out of the chicken here? Let's try something!" Or the genius Italian who was the first one to say, "You know what? These tomatoes are really good, but I bet if we cooked them we could make a sauce that would be really versatile, and we could just keep it going on the stove, and we'd always have something to put over pasta." Genius. We don't know who that was.

Would you say you've always had a passion for food?
No, I wouldn't say so. I was not an eater when I was a child. Between the ages of 1 and 4, I gained one pound and my parents thought I was trying to pass away because I didn't eat. I ate peanut butter and rice pudding and Wonder Bread with jelly on it — terrible, terrible things, but it kept me alive. I never gained weight until I was 30. Then I guess I started eating more regularly because I was making a good living. I will enjoy food, but I'm not a real Fancy Dan. I've gone to high-end restaurants and had good food and everything, but I really think if somebody makes a great steak chili or an amazing meat sauce on pasta, I'm a very easy guy in that way.



Are there any current food trends you want to poke holes in?
Six months after something was good for you, it's now the worst thing you could eat. But that's fear for sale. That's something else. That's people selling newspapers with "here are the 10 things that you're eating now that will kill you within a week." That's a whole different thing.

Benched

"Waiting for Guffman" and "Best in Show" director Christopher Guest is finally making another movie, "Mascots." Will you be in it?
No, I won't be. Chris calls when he needs someone like me, and this time it just didn't work out because I'm in Albuquerque an unpredictable amount of time [for "Better Call Saul."] You know what? He'll get some ham-and-egger. He'll do fine. It's going to be amazing anyway because he does great work. I think everyone will be very happy, myself included.

The college prep that no one will tell you about

More than half of first-year students feel emotionally unprepared for college — that's a big problem.

RAQUEL LANERI
@RaquelLaneri
raquel.laneri@metro.us

College prep, for most students, means taking Advanced Placement courses and studying for the SAT. But one thing incoming college freshmen aren't prepared for is the emotional transition that can come with moving away from home.

"We have this image of college students going off and having just one big, grand party," says Dr. Victor Schwartz, medical director of the JED Foundation, which helped sponsor a study on the emotional well-being of first-year students. "[But] it turns out that a number of students who are drinking heavily are actually trying to address feelings of stress and loneliness," he says. "They just haven't really thought through and prepared themselves for what it means to be living on their own."

We asked Schwartz for his advice on how teens can ready themselves for the college transition.

Take on more responsibilities

A lot of the stress that comes with starting college in a new place stems from not knowing basic life skills, like being able to do laundry or manage money.

"These things sound obvious, but they're not so easy or intuitive if you've never had to do them before," Schwartz says. "Parents can begin trying to help their 11th- or 12th-graders make some more of these decisions, manage some more of these things."

Know where resources are on campus

College marks the "first time that many students will be largely responsible for their own medical and mental health care," says Schwartz. "Getting a handle on the kinds of services available and where they are will help manage some of the stress." That's particularly true of students with a history of health issues: "There should be a plan that's worked out with their at-home clinicians as to how care will continue," he says.

Be social

It's normal to feel lonely after moving away from family and friends. But no matter how much you miss them, it's important to put yourself out there.

Find out about clubs, go to the campus school-activity fair and make sure to attend — and participate in — orientation.

"It's a chance to really begin to meet some people and find out where the important resources that you may need on campus are."

Hard times

A study by the JED Foundation, Partnership for Drug-Free Kids and the Jordan Porco Foundation has found that 60 percent of first-year students feel they haven't been adequately prepared emotionally for college. More than 50 percent say they have trouble finding emotional support on campus when they need it. And students who feel emotionally in-over-their-head report lower grade point averages and a higher rate of drug and alcohol consumption.

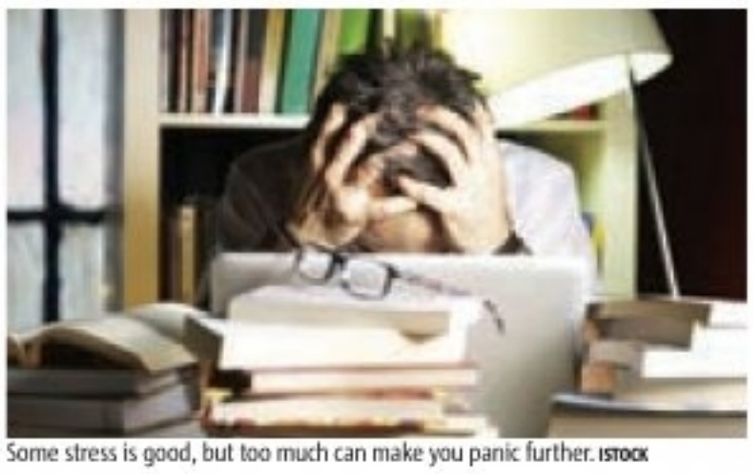
Why you're so stressed out

How to manage anxiety and increase productivity.

RACHEL KASHDAN
@MetroBOS
letters@metro.us



Some stress is good, but too much can make you panic further. ISTOCK

Feeling stressed out? With constant pings in our pockets, 50-hour workweeks and hectic commutes, it's hard not to be. Dana Gionta and Dan Guerra, clinical psychologists, executive coaches and co-authors of "From Stressed to Centered: A Practical Guide to a Healthier and Happier You," are on a mission to help Americans manage all of that harmful tension and anxiety. Here's what we learned from them.

Remember, more stress = less success

Stress isn't always a problem; in fact, we need some stress to help us focus and perform well in high-pressure situations, like testing or writing up a report on deadline.

"At some point, though, when your stress levels continue to go up, what happens is [the stress] begins to undermine our performance, and then that begins to decline," Gionta explains. The loss of focus on the task at hand, meanwhile, can cause you to stress and panic further, until you feel completely paralyzed.

Just breathe

Put one hand on your chest, one hand on your stomach, and breathe in and out slowly. Which hand is moving up and down more? If it's the hand on your chest, you're breathing shallowly and it's not helping keep your stress in check.

Instead, Gionta recommends practicing "belly" breathing. "Allow it to come in almost like there's a balloon in your stomach," then "blow out and notice belly going into spine slowly."

Gionta suggests practicing this type of breathing for two to three minutes a day for three to four weeks to learn to breathe like this automatically.

Take care of yourself

In addition to sleep, a healthy diet and exercise, Guerra says setting "personal and professional boundaries" is key to prevent stress from mounting — that often means putting your own well-being first.

And if that seems selfish, know that if you're not taking care of yourself, you won't be able to be of assistance to anyone else.

Guerra says that just like airplane safety instructions say to put on your own oxygen mask before helping others, you need to first look after yourself so that you are "healthy enough to be able to be there for others."

Patriots stay perfect after Jets mount effort, hold AFC East lead

Metro breaks down three of the most important things that went down Sunday afternoon.

BRIAN ROBB
@CelticsHub
sports@metro.us

Rob Gronkowski was an impact player (again) Sunday, catching 11 passes for 108 yards and a touchdown. GETTY IMAGES

The Jets gave the Patriots their stiffest challenge of the young season on Sunday afternoon, but they failed to slow down Tom Brady when it mattered most.

The veteran quarterback threw for 150 yards and two touchdowns in the fourth quarter, leading New England (6-0) to a 30-23 comeback victory over the Jets.

The Jets (4-2) put up a tough fight under first-year head coach Todd Bowles at Gillette Stadium for three quarters. Ryan Fitzpatrick's (295 passing yards, two touchdowns) timely passing helped the Jets regularly convert third down situations and keep New England's offense off the field for much of the contest.

Chris Ivory's 9-yard touchdown reception in the third quarter capped a 13-play drive and gave the Jets a 17-16 lead. Nick Folk added a field goal in the early fourth quarter to stretch the lead to 20-16, before Brady (34 of 54, 355 yards) responded with a pair of clutch drives in the final period. First, Danny Amendola's six-yard touchdown reception gave New England a 23-20 lead with 7:16 remaining in the game. Minutes later Brady connected with Rob Gronkowski (game-high 108 receiving yards) on a 14-yard touchdown strike to put the Jets away.

1 LaFell struggles to shake the rust
The veteran receiver returned from a left foot injury to see his first action of the season in Week 7 but struggled to make plays for most of the afternoon. Despite being targeted eight times, he finished with a mere two receptions for 25 yards. LaFell dropped six of those targets, and Bill Belichick responded to those ball control issues by benching the wide receiver in favor of Scott Chandler or Aaron Dobson on several drives in the second half.

2 Amendola steps up
With LaFell and Julian Edelman dealing with drops, Brady turned to another of his receiving options in the fourth quarter: Amendola. The 29-year-old was a sponge in the final period, making five of his eight receptions of the day in the frame including an acrobatic catch along the sideline. On an afternoon when the Patriots' offense was shorthanded due to the absence of Dion Lewis (abdomen), Amendola stepped up to help keep New England undefeated.

3 Same old Jets
Despite a valiant effort, the Jets still shot themselves in the foot on several pivotal plays in the fourth quarter. An all-out blitz on New England's final drive left Gronkowski wide-open for a 14-yard touchdown reception in the fourth quarter, causing the Jets to fall behind by two scores. Brandon Marshall also cost the Jets' offense one last chance to tie the game. After the Jets recovered an onside kick with a few ticks remaining, the Jets advanced the ball into Patriots territory before the wide receiver was whistled for failing to get set before the snap. The illegal procedure call led to a 10-second clock runoff, ending the game on the penalty.

Skins pull off franchise-record comeback

A look around the league as Week 7 wraps up.

LUKE MILLER
@MetroBOS
sports@metro.us

Washington stayed in the NFC East hunt with Sunday's comeback win. GETTY IMAGES

Tampa Bay had a three-point lead and the ball on the Washington 1-yard line with just over two minutes left in the fourth, but Charles Sims couldn't punch it in and the Buccaneers had to settle for a field goal.

Washington made them pay, going eighty yards on the arm of Kirk Cousins, who threw his third touchdown pass of the second half to Jordan Reed with 24 seconds left to seize a 31-30 victory.

It was the largest comeback victory in team history for Washington, which trailed 24-0 in the first half.

Vikings 28, Lions 17
After falling behind 17-6 to begin the game, the Vikings scored 22 straight points before taking a safety to finish the game Sunday. Adrian Peterson, questionable with an illness before the game, played and had 110 total yards, while quarterback Teddy Bridgewater finished with 316 yards passing, one short of his career high. Blair Walsh hit five field goals for the Vikings, including two from 50-plus.

Jaguars 34, Bills 31
Jacksonville won in London for the first time despite a furious comeback attempt by the Buffalo Bills. After back to back defensive touchdowns helped create a 28-3 Jacksonville advantage, the Bills scored the game's next 28 points to take a 31-28 lead. But Blake Bortles found Allen Hurns on a 31-yard-touchdown pass with just over two minutes left to steal the win.

Chiefs 23, Steelers 13
The Chiefs upset the Steelers for just their second win of the season behind 110 yards rushing from Charcandrick West and their defense, which forced Landry Jones into three turnovers. The Steelers fell to 2-2 without Ben Roethlisberger despite getting over 120 yards from both Le'Veon Bell and Antonio Brown.

Saints 27, Colts 21
It was a tale of two games, as the Saints built a 27-0 lead before almost surrendering it entirely to the Colts. The Saints took advantage of a short field after three Indianapolis turnovers and a fake field goal attempt to rely on their oft-underused rushing game. Mark Ingram and Khiry Robinson punched it into the end zone three times between them, and Ingram had 143 yards on just 14 carries.

Rams 24, Browns 6
Todd Gurley had his third-straight 120-plus-yard effort on the ground and scored the first two touchdowns of his career for the Rams as they dispatched a Browns team that lost four fumbles on the day.

Falcons 10, Titans 7
Often second to the offense in praise, the Atlanta defense forced Zach Mettenberger into two interceptions and limited the Titans to 256 yards on a day where the Falcons' offense could gain yards but not points. Despite that, it was the usual suspects getting work done for Atlanta, as Devonta Freeman turned in his fourth 100-yard-game and Julio Jones caught the game-winning touchdown.

Bruins continue bipolar play

The Bruins look like a different team at home than on the road this season.

RICH SLATE
@RichSlate
sports@metro.us

It's early, but the Bruins have not played up to expectations so far this season. GETTY IMAGES

Through its first seven games of the 2015-16 regular season, you cannot find a more up-and-down team in the NHL than the Bruins (3-3-1). Throw conventional wisdom out the window when you take a closer look at their game-by-game results thus far: Boston is winless at TD Garden (0-3-1) and unbeaten on the road (3-0). What's more, backup goaltender Jonas Gustavsson (2.50 goals against average, .896 save percentage) has won both of his starts while starter Tuukka Rask (4.40 goals against average, .854 save percentage) has been a complete disaster, having allowed 22 goals already.

As always, the truth about the B's lies somewhere between these two extreme identities. They will be better at home and things will certainly regress on the road. To suggest that there is a goalie controversy before Halloween is laughable at best and not worthy of debate at this extremely early juncture. Boston's 5-3 win over the Islanders (5-2-1) on Friday was easily its most impressive victory of the season. It was the first time that they have beaten a playoff team from last year and more importantly, they built a two-goal lead and this time built off of that rather than blowing it like they did in previous losses to Tampa Bay (6-3) on Columbus Day and Philadelphia (5-4 in OT) last Wednesday.

"It just shows that if we stick to the system and continue to play the way that we want to, then we can come back from different scores within the game (they trailed 2-1 in 1st period)," said Bruins defenseman Torey Krug.

Another good sign for Boston is that they are starting to get contributions from players all over their lineup. Brett Connolly scored a goal vs. New York, for the second game in a row, while a new-look fourth line including Ryan Spooner (1 goal, 1 assist) and rookie Joonas Kempainen (1 goal, 1 assist) each added two points. David Pastrnak potted his first goal since Opening Night and David Krejci, who is tied for the NHL lead with 12 points (5 goals, 7 assists), clinched it with an empty-netter.

The Bruins host Arizona (4-3-1) before a weekend trip to Florida (4-3-1) on Friday and Tampa Bay (5-2-2) on Halloween.

Boston figures to be fighting with the Panthers all season for a playoff spot and the Lightning are one of the top teams in the East. It's not an easy stretch by any means, especially since the road games are on back-to-back nights but the B's can settle one thing by finally getting three points on Causeway Street.

BOSTON'S POWER PLAY LEADS THE ENTIRE NHL IN EFFICIENCY.
